World Day of Prayer March 6

RISE! TAKE YOUR MAT AND WALK

World Day of Prayer dates back to the 19th century, when Christian women of the United States and Canada initiated cooperative activities in support of women's involvement in mission at home and around the world. They had a strong sense of identification with the needs of women and children and searched for ways to provide support. They were encouraged to engage in personal prayer and take leadership within their mission auxiliaries and associations.

By 1897 six denominations had formed a committee for a united day of prayer for home missions. In 1911 women of the six participating denominations wrote a common worship service on a rotating basis and called for a united day of prayer for foreign missions.

After the devastation of World War I, women knew that world peace was intrinsically tied to world mission and renewed their efforts for unity. The first Friday of Lent was established as a joint day of prayer for missions and celebrated for the first time on February 20, 1920.

Since then the movement has spread across the world. Each year women from a different country prepare the service, which reflects their culture and their aspirations. In 2020 we learn from the people of Zimbabwe, a landlocked country in Southern Africa, searching for

Holy Communion Sunday 8:30 and 10 am Morning Prayer Tuesday 9:30 am

This is a World Day of Prayer 2020 painting by Nonhlanhla Mathe of Zimbabwe. It says "Let us give a healing hand to the needy, let us embrace children with love as their future is ahead, and let us open our arms in joy, as the time to rise up has come."

peace during political transition. A change in government, an economic crash, protests and a massive cyclone, have all devastated the country. However, women, churches and ecumenical organizations have not lost hope. "Rise! Take Your Mat and Walk," said Jesus. (John 5: 2 to 9a) Our sisters in Zimbabwe are taking Jesus' encounter to be a call to act in love for peace and reconciliation.

International Women's Day Celebrated on March 8

Women in Britain sought the right to vote as far back as Queen Victoria's time, when suffragists were vilified and jailed for demanding what we take for granted. In Canada the battle started in 1916, but it took until 1925 to gain women the right to vote in the first few provinces, and it was not until 1940 that Québec finally gave women that privilege.

The historic legal victory was due to the persistence of five Alberta women - Emily Murphy, Nellie McClung, Irene Parlby, Louise McKinney and Henrietta Edwards.

Emily Murphy was a judge. From her first day in court lawyers had challenged her rulings because she was not a "person" under the British North America Act.

Women were outraged. By 1927 they had support across Canada. Three times the Prime Minister refused to debate the question. Twice the Governor-General said no. They petitioned the Supreme Court. The appeal was unanimously denied.

Finally, in 1929, they took their demand to the British Privy Council in London, where the answer was yes. This landmark decision meant that women were no linger classed with "children and idiots" (that really was the term used then). They were now "persons" under Canadian law, and could not just vote, but even participate as Members of Parliament. There are still many battles to be won here in Canada - pay equity and spousal abuse, to name just two.

But in many other countries girls and women are caught in situations which deny them the right to be educated, to choose a life partner, even to venture outside their home without a male "guardian". That is why International Women's Day is important.

As long as one woman is not free, none of us is truly free.

OUTSTANDING CANADIAN WOMEN

Purim - the story of a wise woman

On March 10 our Jewish neighbours will be celebrating the most fun-filled, action-packed day of the Jewish year, the feast called Purim. It commemorates their nation's miraculous salvation from a despotic ruler more than two millennia ago.

Christians can read the story in the Old Testament Book of Esther, a fascinating tale of intrique, power-struggle and feminine wisdom.

Today Jews tell this story again, dressing up in holiday finery, sometimes even wearing costumes to depict the characters in the story. They place special stress on caring for the needy, and emphasize the importance of friendship and community, singing, laughing and having fun together.

March 3 - World Wildlife Day

World Wildlife Day will be celebrated in 2020 with the theme "Sustaining all Life on Earth", including all wild animal and plant species as key components of the world's biodiversity. Earth is home to countless species of fauna and flora - too many to count. This rich diversity, and the billions of years during which its myriad elements have interacted, are what has made our planet habitable for all living creatures, including humans.

Historically, we have depended on the constant interlinkages among all elements of the biosphere for all our needs: the air we breathe, the food we eat, the energy we use, and the materials we need for all purposes. However, unsustainable human activities and exploitation of the species and natural resources that make up the habitats and ecosystems of all wildlife are imperiling the world's biodiversity. Nearly a quarter of all species are presently at risk of going extinct in the coming decades, and their demise would only speed up the disappearance of countless others, putting us in danger as well.

As Christians, our prayers include promises to respect the earth and the creatures God made, so this day set aside by the United Nations to honour wildlife has special meaning for us.
